In anticipation of the President's State of the Union Address, Judith Stein, executive director of the Center for Medicare Advocacy, says,

“The President insists that Medicaid and Medicare are too expensive and must be cut back. The Center for Medicare Advocacy calls on Congress and the Administration to be smart shoppers on behalf of our oldest and sickest citizens. They should insist on bulk purchasing drugs on behalf of all 41 million Medicare beneficiaries and stop pouring money into private plans. To do otherwise is to waste taxpayers' money and to value private industry over seniors.”

Judith Stein is available to discuss Medicare and the State of the Union, at the telephone number and email address above.
